This Portland company gives mental health providers insights

"We've been compounding the opportunity for years," said William Portrait, president of Portrait Health, which is doing business as Owl Insights.

The Portland company gives mental health providers unique data on patient behavior that can help them change how they operate when they can't track patients in person. The company is one of many that have rapidly developed telemedicine and telehealth practices to help consumers access medical care remotely during the pandemic.

"I would expect that telemedicine will be much more mainstream now," Portrait said. "It's a natural progression. Vs.

"We've been compounding the opportunity for years," said William Portrait, president of Portrait Health, which is doing business as Owl Insights.

The Portland company gives mental health providers unique data on patient behavior that can help them change how they operate when they can't track patients in person. The company is one of many that have rapidly developed telemedicine and telehealth practices to help consumers access medical care remotely during the pandemic.

"I would expect that telemedicine will be much more mainstream now," Portrait said. "It's a natural progression. Vs.

"We've been compounding the opportunity for years," said William Portrait, president of Portrait Health, which is doing business as Owl Insights.

The Portland company gives mental health providers unique data on patient behavior that can help them change how they operate when they can't track patients in person. The company is one of many that have rapidly developed telemedicine and telehealth practices to help consumers access medical care remotely during the pandemic.

"I would expect that telemedicine will be much more mainstream now," Portrait said. "It's a natural progression. Vs.